

The Woman I Have Become, produced by WHIWH in collaboration with the above organizations is directed by award winning documentary film maker Alison Duke. The film chronicles the lives of 8 women of African and Caribbean descent living with HIV in Toronto. The documentary highlights their challenges and successes in navigating multiple systems, dealing with family, service providers and others in their lives, while portraying their tremendous spirit. This film can be used as an important educational tool for supporting HIV positive women, service providers and community members in their efforts to deal with HIV/AIDS within African and Caribbean communities in Canada. The Woman I Have Become is a collaboration between Women's Health in Women's Hands Community Health Centre, Black Coalition for AIDS Prevention, Voices of Positive Women, African Community Health Services, Africans in Partnership Against AIDS, and the African & Caribbean Council on HIV in Ontario.